Application Instructions (Autumn 2022)

The following instructions are for those applying for enrollment to the School of Interdisciplinary Science and Innovation starting in October 2022.

1. October 2022 Intake

Only a limited number of students will be admitted to the school.

2. Admission Policy

A. What Kind of Students Are We Seeking?

To achieve the ideals and objectives in its Education Charter, Kyushu University National University Corporation seeks students who will grow into active learners with the desire to learn for themselves and the ability to go further in posing their own questions, scrutinizing and considering the issues creatively and critically, and working with others to solve problems based on a broad outlook. This growth will be stimulated by the comprehensive liberal arts education and specialist basic education provided at university, building upon the general education in basic disciplines and subjects provided at high school and similar educational institutions.

ISI welcomes students with the following qualities, abilities, and attitudes, whether from within Japan or overseas.

Initiative and independence: Has a proactive attitude, with the desire to set creative study themes for themselves and acquire the requisite living knowledge and useful skills that go beyond the boundaries of conventional disciplines.

Collaborative learning ability: Has outstanding qualities and a wealth of experience in such areas as scientific exploration and social activities, and a collaborative attitude that enables them to move forward with workable activities while cooperating with others.

Multifaceted thinking capabilities: Has gained a wide-ranging basic and applied knowledge of a variety of conventional disciplines and has the thinking capabilities required to use and integrate this knowledge critically to solve advanced, complex social problems.

International outlook: Has a strong interest in and diverse experience of the international community, a powerful desire to engage in activities on the international stage, and the high-level linguistic ability required to achieve this in practice.

B. The Relationship between the Students We Seek and the Three Elements of Academic Ability

(1) Knowledge and skills: Knowledge and skills acquired through the general education in basic disciplines and subjects provided at high school and similar educational institutions. In addition, a strong interest in and diverse experience of the international community in particular, a powerful desire to engage in activities on the international stage, and the high-level linguistic ability required to achieve this.

(2) Abilities including the ability to think, make judgments, and express themselves: A talent for thinking in a multifaceted way, making objective judgments, and communicating these to others in their own words. In addition, a wide-ranging basic and applied knowledge of a variety of conventional disciplines and the thinking capabilities required to use and integrate this knowledge critically to solve advanced, complex social problems.

(3) Willingness to take the initiative and learn while collaborating with a diverse array of people: A respectful attitude toward diversity, and tolerance and empathy for differing ideas. In addition, a proactive attitude, with the desire to set creative study themes for themselves and acquire the requisite living knowledge and useful skills that go beyond the boundaries of conventional disciplines, along with outstanding qualities and a wealth of experience in such areas as scientific exploration and social activities, and a collaborative attitude that enables them to move forward with workable activities while cooperating with others.

C. Relationship to the Methods for Selecting University Entrants

ISI is committed to switching from entrance examinations that test knowledge to entrance examinations that identify abilities. To identify candidates' abilities from multiple perspectives, ISI selects entrants based on the following four policies.

1. Four Types of Selection Examination

Based on the perspective described in the section "What Kind of Students Are We Seeking?", ISI conducts four types of selection examination to identify candidates' abilities and attitudes: Comprehensive Admission, Recommendation-Based Admission, General Admission, and International Admission. As each type of selection examination combines multiple perspectives, candidates' abilities, ambitions, and aptitudes are evaluated in a multifaceted and comprehensive way.

2. Questions Common to the Humanities and Science

As a school consisting of a single department, we set examination questions on topics common to the humanities and science (except for international students). We have prepared questions that all candidates will be able to answer, whether they majored in science or humanities at high school, to ensure that neither group is at a disadvantage.

3. Statement of Motivation

In light of the fact that this is an entirely new undergraduate school of a kind never seen before, all candidates, regardless of which admission system they choose, are required to submit a Statement of Motivation so that we can confirm their understanding of and aptitude for ISI.

4. Reasonable Accommodation for Candidates with Disabilities

Candidates who will require accommodation or support when taking an ISI entrance examination or after entering ISI are encouraged to contact us so that we can consider giving reasonable accommodation.

The relationship between the kind of students we are seeking, the three elements of academic ability, and the methods for selecting university entrants is shown in the Table of Selection Methods.
