

What we do

Provide multifaceted psychological and developmental assessments

- Conducts comprehensive evaluations of each client's characteristics and needs
- Develops support systems that clients and families can access independently

Offer group-based developmental support: Moku-Moku group

- Provides group-based therapy through the Moku-Moku group
- Encourages children to express themselves and supports families through shared activities

Deliver psychological rehabilitation, including Clinical Dohsa-hou therapy

- Provides psychological rehabilitation through structured physical movement.
- Supports the well-being of all, including children, adults, and people with disabilities.

Fundraising project Advancing well-being in mind and body

Establishing community hubs for developmental support and psychological rehabilitation

Kyushu University's Center for Clinical Psychology and Human Development

Why it matters

Improve access to support services in local communities

- Expands access to developmental assessments and support programs
- Ensures consistent opportunities for individuals and families in local communities

Bridging clinical practice, education, and research

- Integrates clinical practice, education, and research
- Trains graduate students to become highly skilled professionals in psychological development

Create a supportive environment

- Supports the development of assessment tools, therapy materials, and data systems through donations
- Enhances professional training programs

How donations are used

Strengthen collaboration with local communities

- Expenses for experts who supervise local communities
- Promoting community outreach

Improve research and clinical environments, including equipment

- Purchasing tools and equipment for psychological assessment and group therapy

Enhance clinical support programs for Dohsa-hou therapy

- Providing necessary specialized equipment for clinical Dohsa-hou therapy and psychological rehabilitation

The Center for Clinical Psychology and Human Development